Miscellaneous References
The defendants in the Champion v. Ames case were arrested and subsequently convicted under an Act of Congress of 1895 which made it formally illegal to conspire or send lottery tickets across state lines. The Congress of the United States passed the Federal Lottery Act in 1895. This piece of legislation prohibited the selling or purchasing of lottery tickets across state lines. The appellant in this case was Charles Champion. Mr. Champion was indicted for shipping Paraguayan lottery rickets from the state of Texas to California.
