THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS
THE EPISTLE
TO THE HEBREWS
AN HISTORICAL AND THEOLOGICAL RECONSIDERATION
THE Baird LECTURE, 1949

BY WILLIAM MANSON
B.A. (Oxon), D.D. (Knox College, Toronto), D.D. (Glasgow)
Professor of Biblical Criticism in the University of Edinburgh

HODDER AND STOUGHTON LTD.
WARWICK SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.4
PREFACE

The present volume incorporates a series of lectures undertaken at the invitation of the Baird Lectureship Trustees, and delivered in the Martin Hall, New College, Edinburgh, in February 1950. I desire cordially to thank the Trustees for the honour conferred on me by the invitation and for their consent to my request under stress of other duties to defer the delivery of the lectures from the autumn of 1949 to the following spring. I wish also to acknowledge the kindness of the Principal and Senate of New College in making the Martin Hall available at the time.

The reasons which have led me to undertake a reconsideration of the purpose of the Epistle are stated in some detail in the opening chapter of the book. As a New Testament teacher I have for long been dissatisfied with the direction which critical thought, principally associated for us in this country and the English-speaking world with the names of two distinguished scholars, Professor James Moffatt and Professor E. F. Scott, has taken with regard to Hebrews during the last half-century. Whereas the older criticism understood the Epistle to reflect a phase or crisis in the evolution of Jewish Christianity in the apostolic period, the modern theory has unhitched the Epistle from these moorings and floated it out into the mid-stream of the general life of the first-century Church, so taking it out of a supposed backwater to give it a place in the main current of Christian history. On this interpretation the religious situation of the community addressed in Hebrews had nothing specifically to do with any attraction exercised by Judaism but was determined by some form of secular drift to irreligion or to paganism.

I cannot conceal the conviction that this right-about-face in critical opinion has involved a turning of the back on some of the most salient features of the Epistle, and has therefore brought about a clouding of the issues. The new theory starts not from the central substance of Hebrews but, as it seems to me, from peripheral features and from a number of a priori and not sufficiently examined assumptions regarding both Judaism and Christianity in the apostolic age. I cannot therefore think that it makes real contact with history. Indeed neither the older nor the more recent approach to the problem of Hebrews has sufficiently integrated the Epistle into the historical development of the world-mission of Christianity or brought the situation behind the letter into clear and adequate focus.

In this opinion I have become confirmed by considerations based on a fresh study of the Stephen-records in the book of the Acts of the Apostles. I am convinced that a straight line runs from the teaching and apologia of the proto-martyr to the Epistle to the Hebrews, and I believe it is to be regarded as a central line in the development of the Christian world-mission. In the present book, therefore, I have sought an approach to Hebrews which will (1) integrate the Epistle afresh into the history of the world-mission from its inception in Stephen, (2) re-evaluate the potentialities of the religious situation in such a centre of world-mission Christianity as Rome, (3) trace the connection between the doctrine of Hebrews and the theology of the world-mission as a whole, and (4) from careful study of the argument of the Epistle establish conclusions as to the situation and character of the community addressed and so recover for the Epistle its organic position in relation to first-century evangelism and life.

It is not necessary here to set out in detail the positions to which I have been led. They are indicated in outline in the closing section of Chapter I, in the summaries which conclude Chapters III and V, and in Chapter VI. The historical ground of the approach is set out in Chapter II, which deals with Stephen and his eschatology; here is indeed the pivot on which my whole argument turns. I have come to see that distinctions of a very important order have to be made within the field of the Early Christian eschatology, and that the stand taken by Stephen has been determinative of Christian theology to its furthest bounds. I have not, however, in the exposition of the relevant material of Hebrews which is undertaken in Chapters III-V attempted anything like a full commentary on the Epistle, but have confined myself to the points which bear on the above critical issues. There is, therefore, no wealth of side-reference to learned works on the more general aspects of the teaching. For myself the results of the particular inquiry on which I have concentrated attention have been to broaden the outlook both on the history—Hebrews is no mere academic treatise—and on the theology of the world-mission of Christianity in the New Testament age. If my construction of the facts is disallowed, I shall look to see it refuted; if it is defective, I trust it will be improved; if it should be thought right, I hope that even within its limits it may help at certain important points to put Christian doctrine more squarely on the foundation of Christian history, and to show it, as I say at the end of the book, rising phoenix-like from the embers not only of Jewish legalism but of the Jewish means of grace.

W. MANSON.

University of Edinburgh,
1st September 1950.

NOTE ON TRANSLATIONS

The rendering of the Epistle is from the author's own translation, and the same holds of passages cited from the Septuagint and other ancient texts, including verse renderings from Greek poets.
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Preface</th>
<th>v</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

CHAPTER I

The Problem of the Epistle and Modern Critical Thought

- Literary, Historical, and Theological Aspects of the Problem | 1
- Purpose of the Present Work | 3
- Traditional and Older Approaches to the Subject | 8
- The Modern Volte-Face in Criticism | 10
- Criticism of the Modern Theory | 18
- Provisional Statement of Positions advanced in the Present Work | 23

CHAPTER II

Stephen and the World-Mission of Christianity

- Stephen | 25
- The Eschatology of Stephen | 27
- The Apologia of Stephen and the Epistle to the Hebrews | 30
- The Rise of the Christian World-Mission | 36
- Divisive Issues created by the World-Mission | 42
CHAPTER III

The Admonitory Sections of the Epistle.—The

| Eschatological Life                     | 47 |
| The Word of Jesus and the Word of the Angels | 48 |
| The Heavenly Calling of Christians and the Eschatological Now | 52 |
| Various Warnings relating to the Crisis | 56 |
| Advancing from First-Principles to the Full Knowledge of the Christian Mystery | 59 |
| The Consecrated Way                     | 65 |
| A Reminiscence and an Assurance.—The Advent of Christ | 71 |
| The Nature and Function of Faith        | 73 |
| The Cloud of Witnesses                  | 81 |
| Other Exhortations                      | 84 |
| Conclusions from Chapter III            | 86 |

CHAPTER IV

The Theological Argument of the Epistle.—

| 1. The Person and Office of the Redeemer | 88 |
| The Finality of the Christian Revelation | 88 |
| The Significance of Christ.—The Wisdom Christology | 90 |
| The Incarnation in Relation to Man, Suffering, and Sin | 98 |
| Jesus Hero and Priest                    | 102 |
CONTENTS

Priest by Predestination and Incarnate Qualification ........................................ 106
Priest after the Order of Melchizedek.—Priest of the Resurrection ......................... 111
Psalm CX .................................................................................................................. 117

CHAPTER V

The Theological Argument of the Epistle.—

II. The Oblation of the Body of Christ ................................................................. 122
   Priest in the Heavenly Sanctuary ...................................................................... 122
   The New Covenant ............................................................................................ 127
   The Old and the New Sanctuaries and their Atonement-Provisions ................. 130
   Priest through the Eternal Spirit ...................................................................... 133
   Mediator of the New Covenant ......................................................................... 138
   The Offering of the Body of Christ .................................................................... 143
   The New Christian Approach to God ................................................................ 147
   The Christian Altar ........................................................................................... 149
   Note on the Holy Communion in the Church .................................................... 155
   Conclusions from Chapters IV and V ............................................................... 156

CHAPTER VI

The Place of the Epistle in Early Christian History and in the New Testament .......... 159
   The Minority Group in the Church at Rome .................................................... 159
   Resistance unto Blood.—The Question of the Date of Hebrews ...................... 162
   The Writer of the Epistle .................................................................................... 167
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Character of the Church at Rome.—St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans</td>
<td>172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Old Testament</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Epistle to the Hebrews and the Evangelical Tradition</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Epistle to the Hebrews and St. Paul</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Epilogue</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INDEX</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Several things about this epistle to the Hebrews have been a subject of debate throughout Christian history, including the identity of the author, where and when it was written, and to whom it was addressed. We will rather confidently answer all of those questions here, even if some of our proofs are only circumstantial. First, it is evident from the closing salutation in the final verses of Hebrews chapter 13 that Paul of Tarsus is the author. There he says, “Know ye that our brother Timothy is set at liberty; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you.” This promise is similar to others. The “Epistle” to the “Hebrews” by Felix Just, S.J., Ph.D. The 19th book of the New Testament is usually called “The Epistle (or Letter) to the Hebrews.” However, its form or genre is not really like an ancient letter (except for the ending), but more like a treatise and a homily (a sermon based on scripture). Moreover, this writing does not explicitly address any “Hebrews” (a title not attached until the second century), and its author was almost certainly not St. Paul (as had been assumed for much of Christian history). Nonetheless, the composition comm